

National Black Church Initiative Calls on Campbell Soup to Address Public Questions About Executive's Remarks

Questions Arise Regarding Comments Attributed to Campbell Soup Executive

WASHINGTON, DC, UNITED STATES, November 24, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The National Black Church Initiative¹ (NBCI) is a coalition of 150,000 African American and Latino faith communities, comprising 27.7 million members. It is deeply disturbed by its executives racist comments and the national quality of the soup. We will write the FDA to request an investigation to determine whether NBCI's 'Myblackfitness.com', a campaign that provides education and nutritional information to our 27.7 million members needs to know: Can we trust the nutritional information on Campbell Soup?"

nutritional values meet standards. Our churches are buying millions of cans of Campbell Soup for our homes and food pantries. NBCI wants to know if your product is safe to eat.

Rev. Anthony Evans, President of NBCI, stated: "NBCI's Myblackfitness.com campaign, which provides education and nutritional guidance to our 27.7 million members, is seeking clarification on whether the nutritional information on Campbell Soup products is accurate and reliable. For this reason, we are reaching out to the company and the FDA."

Campbell Soup Company, one of the most recognized food brands in the United States, is facing a reputational crisis following the release of a recording in which one of its senior executives insulted consumers, made racist comments about Indian employees, and questioned the quality of the products the company sells. The controversy erupted after an audio recording surfaced in which Martin Bally, who served as Vice President of the Information Technology department at Campbell Soup Company, made offensive remarks during a meeting with a subordinate.

ABOUT NBCI
